

Trieste, near which town, at the Olifiteau of Bant Andrea, under a wearisome surveillance, she expired in 1820, watehed by her husband, Felix Baeeioeehi, and her sister Caroline. Her monument is in the Baceiocelii Chapel in Ban Petronio, Bologna.

Caroline, the wife of Murat, was the only one of the family untrue to Napoleon. Very ambitious, and forgetting how completely she owed her kingdom of Naples to her brother, she had urged Murat in 1814 to separate from Napoleon, and, still worse, to attack Eugene, who held the north of Italy against the, Austrians. She relied on the formal treaty with Austria that Murat should retain his Kingdom of Naples, and she may also have trusted to the good offices of her former admirer Metternieh. "When the Congress of Vienna met, the French Minister, Talleyrand, at once began to press for the removal of Murat. A trilling treaty was not considered an obstacle to the Heaven-sent deliverers of Europe, and Murat, believing his fate sealed, hearing of Napoleon's landing, and urged on by a misleading letter from Joseph Bonaparte*, at once inarched to attack the Austrians. He was easily routed by the Austrians under Neipperg, the future, husband of Maria Louisa. Murat fled to France, and Caroline first took refuge in an English man-of-war, the Tremendous^ being promised a free passage to England. She was, however, handed over to the Austrians, who kept her in confinement at Hamburg near Vienna. In October, 1815, Murat landed in Calabria in a last wild attempt to recover his throne. He was arrested arid immediately shot. After his murder Caroline, taking the title of Countess of Lipona (an anagram of Napoli), was permitted to retire to Trieste with Klisa, Jchfmio, and his wife. Caroline was almost without means of existence, the Neapolitan Bourbons refusing even to give up the property she had brought there. She married a General M'aedonah'L When Horteuse was buried at liueil Caroline obtained permission to attend tho sad ceremony. In 18,18 she went to France to try to obtain a pension, and succeeded in getting one of 100,000 francs. She died from cancer in the stomach in 1839, and was buried in the Cainpo Santo, Bologna
